

was ready for him, and his work completed the work of one epoch, and laid the foundation of another. Without the foundational work of Tudor and Stuart days the nineteenth century engineer and scientist would have been as "voices crying in the wilderness." Each age has its special work, nor is any part of that work unnecessary in the great scheme of evolution. A study of the history of civilisation convinces one not only of integration working in every great sphere of human activity, but of a more complete and far-reaching integration which links all spheres, and makes their evolution contingent on the steady advance of all.