

The loyalty, confidence and trust of the members must at all times be maintained .

A contract binding members to the organization should run for a long period of time but should provide for the withdrawal of either the organization or members at definite periods within the time covered by the contract.

If these fundamentals are carried out fully, there is no reason for failure of an organization. It must be realized at all times that it requires exceptional men to run a large organization and that it requires full knowledge, information and appreciation on the part of the members to enable the management to be successful.