

term, if the historian objects to their wider use of his trade mark.

Repetitions and contradictions are inevitable in a volume to which so many thinkers have contributed, therefore an apology for them is superfluous.

I feel that the group of scholars who contributed to this book need no further recognition from me here. Such acknowledgment would seem to suggest that the book is mine, and I make exclusive claim to no part of it save the errors.

Professor A. C. Krey read all of the manuscript, and Professor Anne Bush MacLear, all of the galley proof. I am especially grateful to the publishers for the interest they have taken in the task of putting the book into print.

EDGAR DAWSON

NEW YORK, 1927