

Preface

SOME desire has been expressed for the publication in a conveniently accessible form of the particular addresses and essays which this little volume contains. They have all appeared before in books or magazines, but they have not been arranged collectively. This has now been done, and, for what they are worth, the contents of this book are now assembled as containing an expression of faith, in knowledge, in higher education, and in a special phase of the unwritten Constitution of the Empire.

HALDANE.

1928.