

CONTENTS

	Page
Acknowledgment.....	423
Letter of submittal.....	424
CHAPTER I.—INTRODUCTION
SEC. 1. Origin of inquiry.....	431
2. Scope of inquiry.....	432
Selection of associations to be studied.....	432
3. Factors determining relative merits of cooperatives versus other types of marketers.....	433
CHAPTER II.—COOPERATIVE MARKETING OF FARM PRODUCTS FROM THE EASTERN SHORE OF VIRGINIA
SEC. 1. Origin of the Eastern Shore of Virginia Produce Exchange, its organization, policies, and methods.....	436
Introduction.....	436
The exchange essentially cooperative.....	436
Origin of the exchange.....	437
Control of the exchange.....	438
Marketing privileges and membership discipline.....	438
Produce grades and brands.....	438
Inspection, organization, and methods.....	439
Compensation of inspectors.....	440
Internal versus Federal-State inspection.....	441
Organization for receiving, selling, and forwarding produce.....	441
Compensation of agents.....	441
Selling organization.....	442
Ascertaining the visible supply.....	442
Determining offering prices and market quotas.....	443
Daily pooling.....	444
Remittances to growers.....	445
Logic of the daily pool.....	446
Price basis.....	446
Breadth of distribution.....	449
Class of customers.....	449
Credit and collections.....	449
Losses from price adjustments.....	450
2. Results of cooperative and noncooperative distribution compared.....	450
Comparison of prices obtained and paid for white potatoes.....	450
Comparison of cooperative with noncooperative results in marketing sweet potatoes.....	456
How the cooperative obtained prices that compared favorably.....	457
Preseason contracts produce good showing for one broker.....	463
How small competitors can oversell cooperative at times.....	464
Comparison of commissions.....	465
False accounts of sales to growers.....	467
3. Comparative costs of operation.....	468
Preliminary discussion of data.....	468
Comparison of operating results as a whole.....	469
Comparison of unit operating costs.....	470
Comparison of inspection costs.....	472
Value of inspection service.....	473
How the cooperative netted deficits in 1925 and 1926.....	474
Conclusion.....	475