

cent. of the people of the province were thrown suddenly into destitution, surely the most vigorous wielding of the axe of economy that the continent has ever seen. But the effect was to drive the city workers to the land, and the great productivity of the country wiped out all traces of the depression within a few years. Indeed, the wheat yield of 1842-3 was so great that it could not all be harvested.